FINDINGS OF FACT

1. The respondent [REDACTED] is a resident of Milwaukee County who received FS benefits in Milwaukee County in August 2012.
2. The respondent was issued a QUEST card that allowed her access to his monthly FoodShare allotment. QUEST cards are electronic benefit transfer cards that replaced food stamp coupon booklets.
3. The respondent's QUEST card was debited $200 at [REDACTED] Distribution, LLC ([REDACTED]) on August 14, 2012. Someone other than the respondent debited the card.
4. [REDACTED] was a licensed vendor of the United States Department of Agriculture Food and Nutrition Service, which enabled it to redeem QUEST cards.
5. [REDACTED] was classified as a mobile vendor and operated out of private vehicles. Between August, 2010 and January, 2013, [REDACTED] redeemed approximately $778,000 in QUEST benefits from food stamp benefit recipients who were not purchasing food, but instead receiving cash for providing access to their QUEST benefits.
6. On or about February 15, 2013, [REDACTED], doing business as [REDACTED], pled guilty to a charge of unlawfully purchasing and redeeming FS benefits. [REDACTED] admitted that no food or groceries were ever provided by [REDACTED] or [REDACTED] in exchange for Quest benefits.
7. On March 24, 2016, the petitioner prepared an Administrative Disqualification Hearing Notice alleging that respondent intentionally transferred $200 in FS benefits to [REDACTED] in exchange for cash payments.

DISCUSSION

Trafficking FoodShare benefits violates the program's rules. Wis. Stat. § 946.92(2g). It includes selling FoodShare benefits for cash. 7 CFR § 271.2; see also Wis. Stat. § 946.92(1)(dm)1. FoodShare recipients lose their eligibility if the department proves by clear and convincing evidence that they intentionally violated the program's rules; the penalty for the first violation is one year. 7 CFR §§ 273.16(e)(6) and (b)(1)(i). The Department seeks to disqualify the respondent for one year because it contends that she exchanged her FoodShare benefits for cash.

Clear and convincing is a middle level of proof that requires the Department to show that more than just a preponderance of the evidence supports its position but does not require it to eliminate all reasonable doubt, as it would have to in a criminal case:

Defined in terms of quantity of proof, reasonable certitude or reasonable certainty in ordinary civil cases may be attained by or be based on a mere or fair preponderance of the evidence. Such certainty need not necessarily exclude the probability that the contrary conclusion may be true. In fraud cases it has been stated the preponderance of the evidence should be clear and satisfactory to indicate or sustain a greater degree of certitude. Such degree of certitude has also been defined as being produced by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence. Such evidence, however, need not eliminate a reasonable doubt that the alternative or opposite conclusion may be true. ...

Kuehn v. Kuehn, 11 Wis.2d 15, 26 (1959)Kuehn, 11 Wis.2d at 26.

Wisconsin Jury Instruction – Civil 205 explains that this level of evidence must clearly have more convincing power than the opposing evidence, but it does not require absolute certainty:

Clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence is evidence which when weighed against that opposed to it clearly has more convincing power. It is evidence which satisfies and convinces you that “yes” should be the answer because of its greater weight and clear convincing power. “Reasonable certainty” means that you are persuaded based upon a rational consideration of the evidence. Absolute certainty is not required, but a guess is not enough to meet the burden of proof. This burden of proof is known as the “middle burden.” The evidence required to meet this burden of proof must be more convincing than merely the greater weight of the credible evidence but may be less than beyond a reasonable doubt.

The McCormick treatise suggests that the standard “could be more simply and intelligibly translated to the jury if they were instructed that they must be persuaded that the truth of the contention is highly probable.” 2 McCormick on Evidence § 340 (John W. Strong gen. ed., 4th ed. 1992). Thus, to find that the respondent intentionally violated the FoodShare program’s rules, the evidence must induce a firm conviction that she attempted to purchase FoodShare benefits and that she did so intentionally, although there may be a reasonable doubt that this is true. Intent is a subjective state of mind determined upon all of the facts. Lecus v. American Mut. Ins. Co. of Boston, 81 Wis.2d 183 (1977). A person is presumed to know and intend the probable and natural consequences of her actions

The allegations against the respondent occurred as part of the [REDACTED] investigation. [REDACTED] Distribution was a licensed FoodShare vendor operated by [REDACTED]. But he did not sell any food. Instead he purchased FoodShare benefits from others for less than their stated value and then redeemed those benefits. Between August, 2010 and January, 2013, [REDACTED] redeemed approximately $778,000 in benefits in this manner from food stamp benefit recipients. On February 15, 2013, [REDACTED] pled guilty to unlawfully purchasing and redeeming FoodShare benefits. He admitted that he never provided food in exchange for the benefits.

The respondent’s Quest card was redeemed for $200 at [REDACTED] Distribution on August 14, 2012. Due to the nature of this illicit business, the most reasonable explanation is that whoever used the card received cash for these transactions. The petitioner does not dispute this, but contends that someone else used her card. She testified that she had recently been released from jail and moved in with a friend. In return for allowing her to live there, she used her FoodShare benefits to help feed that person. She did not believe it was a violation of the program’s rules as long as the card was used for food.

I am skeptical of the petitioner’s explanation because all recipients are told the FoodShare rules and expected to know them. Still, people often don’t pay much attention to rules or know them, even if they do check a box indicating that they do—after all, how many people know what they are agreeing to when they check the box while obtaining an app or something else from the internet? Not sharing your card with others is a fairly basic rule that the respondent should know. Nevertheless, she did sound believable when she testified. Because the department seeks to disqualify her from the FoodShare program, it must do more than show that it is more likely than not that she intentionally violated the program’s rules. Given these circumstances, I cannot find that it established by clear and convincing evidence that she intentionally violated FoodShare program rules. Therefore, it cannot disqualify her from the FoodShare program for one year.

I note to the respondent that the department does not have to prove intent if it seeks to recover an overpayment based upon the facts discussed here. Therefore, if it does bring an action, she cannot argue that she didn’t know the program’s rules.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

For the reasons discussed above, there is no clear and convincing evidence that the respondent intended to commit an IPV.

NOW, THEREFORE, it is

ORDERED

That the petitioner’s determination of an intentional program violation is reversed, and the petition for review is hereby dismissed.
